Hurry Up! ...and Slow Down

No need to tell you that the Xmas rush is upon us, the Christmas decorations have pushed the Halloween stuff out the door in every store I've been in this week. We love this time of year, the lights, the songs, the special parties, even the gift buying. It's really easy to get swept up in the current of it all. So, before you get carried away with all the "hustle & bustle", let me light this little candle of hope.

It is OK to slow down. It is OK to buy less. It is OK to spend an evening making some small thing with your kids  instead of rushing off to buy one more thing for one more person. It is OK to let go of some family tradition and replace it with making a memory with your kids. In fact, it may be OK to just say I love and not give a gift at all. The grown-ups will get over it, and if they don't, they should. And the kids won't mind (much) because they will take their cue from you. So give a gift to yourself, and don't pile on the guilt for doing less. You will discover all kinds of treasures in the time you've saved to be together.

Each day is a gift from God.
That's why it is called the present.

P.S. Give something really zany: Buy lunch tickets for the rest of the school year. Now that's going crazy with the practical.

- We are partnering with SJCC student, Whitney Drown and Mrs. Streaker, who will be helping us begin construction of our school web site.
